Chapter One Greetings & Introductions

Most Americans know more Spanish words and use them more often than they realize. When you start learning to speak Spanish on the job, start with the words you know. Using please and thank you or gracias and por favor are great ways to get started. You'll get positive feedback and that will help to build your confidence. How many of the words in this section do you know already?

Work Assistance Programs

Federal and state programs that help clients find jobs, receive training, get housing, or provide other essential services are very important to millions of people living in America. The vocabulary in this chapter is designed to help you get the information you need to help you administer these programs properly and accurately. Here's something else for you to consider as you learn this list. Two important federal programs, Medicare and Medicaid, are combinations of two English words that have been joined together to make a new concept. Latin American countries don't have social programs like these, so the terms are quite long and difficult to translate. This is one time when using "Spanglish," to communicate comes in handy because most Latinos refer to these programs as "el Medicare" and "el Medicaid."

Spanish Sounds Rápido – So, What Do I Do Now?

Spanish does sound fast to most of us gringos, so the key here is not to pánico. Stay calm and focused. Use body language like facial expressions, and motion with your hands, too. This kind of non-verbal communication can be a great way to help you get your idea across, even if your language skills fail you. The following phrases will also help you, so make them a priority. ¿Comprende, amigo?

Chapter 3 The Basic Information

When you meet a Spanish-speaking client for the first time, it's vital that you obtain the correct information. In this section you will be introduced to phrases that will help you start a basic file. This probably sounds like an incredibly difficult task, but don't worry! We're going to start with the simple question phrase, what is your. In Spanish, that's ¿cúal es su? After you've said that, use one of the following words to help you get the information you need. Then it's no problema.

Chapter 10 Public Assistance

In comparison to most Latin American countries, the United States provides a much greater range of government sponsored social programs. Most Latin American countries have no social programs at all. So, often Latinos are not aware that there are programs to help them. Here are some phrases to help you in your screening process.

The Numbers

Many of you already know numbers in Spanish up to 10. But do you know them out of sequence? If you can't remember that 8 is ocho without counting up to it, put a cue card with the numbers in Spanish on your phone at the office and at home. Every time you dial a number, look at your Spanish cue card and say the number you are dialing in español. When you've mastered the numbers to 10, change your cue card and go by 10's to 100. You can also practice your numbers in your car when you're stopped in el trafico. Look for numbers on license plates and on billboards. Los numeros are everywhere! If you try these techniques, you'll be well on your way to mastering an important set of vocabulary!

Child Protective Services

Working in child protective services can place you sometimes in both delicate and dangerous situations with the children you are assigned to help. Gaining their trust is critical in obtaining the information that you need to assist them and their families. Using your Spanish here will help you like nothing else will! Start with the following introduction and then proceed to the questions listed below to help you gain trust and to get the information you need. Also your interview might not need to be entirely in Spanish. Try using English with children that are old enough to be in school. They tend to learn English as a second language quickly, so that's going to be a big help!

Does It Hurt? – Are you in pain?

When a Spanish-speaking client is talking about where it hurts, it's expressed a little differently than it is in English. Rather than being in pain, in Spanish you have pain, so you will hear the words tengo dolor, which means I have pain and then the part of the body that hurts. When you are asking if the patient is in pain, use the phrase ¿tiene dolor?

Chapter 5 The Days of the Week & Months of the Year

When you need to schedule an appointment called a cita with a client, you will need to learn the days of the week and the months of the year. This is such a practical list of vocabulary, especially when you pair them with the numbers you learned in the last chapter. Here's an important tip: In Spanish a date is always given in one standard format. First, say the day of the week. The word "el" or "the" comes next, followed by the date. The month always comes last. In other words, you will always be expressing dates like this: Tuesday, the 5th of May or martes, el cinco de mayo. To practice, say all the birthdays of the members of your family and your friends.

Hispanic families tend to be very close, so it's important to know who's who in the familia. Knowing this simple list of words will help you build relationships. After all, everyone wants to talk about their niños.

Chapter 7Parts of the Body

If you work in Child Protective Services or with Elder Care Programs, it's possible that you could be called upon to investigate cases of neglect or abuse. When this is a part of your job description, you will find that learning the parts of the body will be useful in helping you determine where your client has injuries.

Here's a strategy for learning this important vocabulary. Start at the top with your head or cabeza and work your way down. Learn the words in groups putting words like leg, thigh, knee, and ankle together. Focus on one section of the body at a time and before you know it, you'll know them all. Once you have learned these words, move on to Chapter 8 so that you can begin asking about pain in these areas.
