

PHOTOGRAPHS FROM

MOMENT of GLORY

THE YEAR UNDERDOGS RULED GOLF

JOHN FEINSTEIN

NEW YORK TIMES BESTSELLING AUTHOR

Mike Weir's finest hour: receiving the green jacket on the Augusta National putting green from Tiger Woods. (Golf Digest)

Even seven years later, it is still difficult for Len Mattiace to talk about his most brilliant day ever on a golf course. (Stan Badz/PGA Tour)

Jim Furyk's unorthodox swing has produced remarkable results through the years. (Copyright USGA Museum/John Mummert)

Foryk with the U.S. Open trophy he had to get engraved. (Copyright USGA Museum/John Mummert)

Jim and Tabitha Furyk, Tabitha's eyes still hidden behind sunglasses.
(Copyright USGA Museum/Steven Gibbons)

For one day, the 2003 U.S. Open belonged to Tom Watson and his caddy, Bruce Edwards. (Copyright USGA Museum/John Mummert)

Stephen Leaney, “the unknown Aussie,” kept it close at Olympia Fields on Sunday while everyone else faded. (Copyright USGA Museum/John Mummert)

Tiger Woods sought a new swing in 2003. It wasn't until 2005 that he again crossed the bridge to dominance. (Copyright USGA Museum/ John Mummert)

Ben Curtis with the Claret Jug, the trophy that put him in the same sentence with Francis Ouimet. (Golf Digest)

Years later, Thomas Bjorn can't bring himself to discuss what happened in the bunker at number 16 on the last day of the 2003 Open Championship. (Golf Digest)

Davis Love III had a chance to win after witnessing Bjorn's disaster but still couldn't believe what he had seen.
(Copyright USGA Museum/Steven Gibbons)

PHOTOGRAPHS FROM

MOMENT of GLORY

THE YEAR UNDERDOGS RULED GOLF

JOHN FEINSTEIN

NEW YORK TIMES BESTSELLING AUTHOR